 - Blurb from the doctor herself: " I do indeed wear two hats! My Ph.D. is in communication and cultural studies and I focused my research and teaching on youth and digital media while at Concordia. I then spent 5 years as research faculty at McGill University in Education Counselling and Psychology, focused on adolescent high-risk issues at the Centre for Youth Gambling and High-Risk Behaviours. I am not a psychologist but I have spent many years looking at how the changes of adolescence can best be understood by educators and parents to build resilience, mitigate risky behaviours, and guide kids to healthy outcomes. When the Quebec government introduced a bill on anti-violence and anti-bullying measures for schools in 2012, I was approached by the Ministry of Education to develop a resource program and training for English schools. That led to my ongoing advocacy work with schools after I left academia in 2013, and has remained an important counterpoint to my full-time job as VP of Marketing for a software division of the Financial Times. I love my work but I missed the teaching and ability to have a direct positive impact with kids and families, so I've continued offering workshops on the side. I have been doing this advocacy work for 12 years now and have excellent references from schools of all sizes across Quebec and Ontario. I'm happy to share references. " ...Dr. Alissa Sklar Ph.D.
